ACROSS RECORD

A message telling of progress and an attempt to make up a portion of the time spent in the completion of repairs has winged its way 1871 miles from the radio plant on board the Oceanic liner Ventura, and was received today at the agency of (Brewer & Co. The communication between ship and shore as it concerns Oceanic vessels operating south of the equator is believed to have eclipsed all other attempts at long distance communica

Captain J. P. Tibbetts, who until the death of Captain J. L. Cowell was chief officer in the steamer, stated in his message that he expected to bring the Ventura at quarantine about 4:30 o'clock next Saturday afternoon.

In order to discharge a considerable quantity of refrigerated meat and provisions from Australia and consigned to the U. S. quartermaster department, the vessel probably will not be despatched for San Francisco until Sun-
